

Risk Triggers™ for Small Business Monitoring

Industry's First Guarantor + Business Alerts in One Platform

Small businesses are an essential part of our US economy. Many of our lending and credit decisions rely on the health of the small business owner's personal finances in order to secure credit. In a challenging economy particularly for small businesses, emerging risks among personal guarantors are important to track to mitigate potential losses.

Don't get caught off-guard

Guarantor Bankruptcy Alert: If a personal guarantor tied to a small business account files for consumer bankruptcy, it could put their small business at risk for meeting the business financial obligations. During the first 12 to 24 months in operation, small businesses owners can rely heavily on their personal income and credit to fund their small business. Monitoring for various consumer bankruptcy types such as Chapter 7, 11, 12, and 13 can help avoid potential losses.

Guarantor Deceased: If one of the personal guarantors becomes deceased, this change could require an additional account review to determine if the sole guarantor on the obligation can continue to meet the financial obligations of the agreement. Deceased alerts occur when the Social Security number monitored is marked as 'retired' by the Social Security Administration.

These two critical events pose many questions surrounding the financial stability of the small business and further review may be required. By enrolling in Risk Triggers for small business monitoring, you won't be caught off guard and can take action immediately.
